In my opinion, there is a reason God said this couple shall not have children. They not only go through the trouble of invitro fertilization but they contract a surrogate mother. This is the definition of a child who is wanted.

Until.....

When a B.C. couple discovered that the fetus their surrogate mother was carrying was likely to be born with Down syndrome, they wanted an abortion.

Wait! The stupidity increases:

"The baby that's being carried is their baby. It's usually their genetic offspring," (Sally Rhoads of SurrogacyInCanada.ca) said. "Why should the intended parents be forced to raise a child they didn't want? It's not fair."

Jill Stanek's new column in World Net Daily is an eye opener. While I was reading I was putting two and two together. And now, I'll be honest, I'm a bit scared. I believe Jill's friend tells the truth. Here is some of the story:

When Abigail Seidman was 10 years old her mother had an abortion. Abigail suspects her father was not the baby's father, and her parents eventually divorced.

Abigail describes her childhood until that time as normal. But the abortion "radicalized" her mother, Abigail told me, who came to decide abortion had not only been the right decision for her but was also good in a moral sense.

THE OPPOSITE OF DOG AND OTHER PUZZLES: OR Does Light Exist in the Physical World?

So today in class we were talking about Aquinas and his argument for God called Necessity and Possibility. In this argument we look at things that exist in the world, and things that exist in the metaphysical world. This was in the context of understanding Good and Evil.

Everything in the world has substance. To Aquinas this means it "exists". It is.

Whether it is in the Physical World or the Metaphysical World doesn't matter, it EXISTS. However, this does not mean it exists "Physically". Science deals with things that exist physically. Philosophy deals with things that exist Metaphysically.

I have been thinking for awhile that it is the adults that have been pushing the sexy clothes for the tweens and teens. Think about it - tweens and some teens don't have jobs! How do they get their clothes? From Mom and Dad's money. Hello? It's not rocket science.

However, this is just disgusting and shows us that teens just might be getting sick of it.

Heidi Medina, a former captain of Central High School's cheerleading squad, stood before the Bridgeport Board of Education last week, took off her oversized sweats and revealed her revealing cheerleading uniform, the Connecticut Post reports.

"We ask with the utmost respect you (to) do anything in your power to help us," Medina said, according to the Post. "I don't feel comfortable wearing this."....

Nyasias Clemons, a senior, said the uniforms violate league rules that require uniforms, when "standing at attention, apparel must cover the midriff."

Don't mess with this 68 year old woman.

It looks like things are heating up in New Jersey.

The setup: In one corner we have Joe Hawley who is a long time supporter of Rep Frank Pallone who is in office for the 6th district. In the other corner we have Jane Frotten who is the 68 year old woman who works for Pallone's challenger Anna C. Little.

The Plot: Both Joe Hawley and Jane Frotten are putting up signs for their representative. Mr. Hawley doesn't like it and tries to get Mrs. Frotten to remove her sign. A verbal altercation with excessive foul language from Mr. Hawley ensues.

The suspense: Will Mr. Hawley control his temper? Will either one of them remove their signs?
